Week in Review:

This week I continued my research on ePortfolios. I watched the recording of the GTT and completed my Anchor Points. After that, I sorted through my favorite quotes to find one for the Call to Action assignment. I completed this, as well as the responses to my peers. For my independent research, I looked deeper into communication techniques and learned how important it is to be able to communicate with others effectively, especially if you want to lead others. For the development assignment, I completed the optional reading; I was particularly fond of learning more about color psychology. Throughout the week, I continued to update my burn-up list as I completed assignments.

Reflect and Connect:

This week felt a bit more as if it wanted us to focus on ourselves rather than others; the Call to Action assignment is probably what spurred this feeling as it had us explore our feelings more than the previous assignments, which had us explore other's lives. I managed to get ahead of my assignments this week, though just barely. I could have done better, I had plans to do better, but I am improving. Change is hard. Moving forward I plan to keep working on my time management and procrastination habits.
