Week in Review:

This last week I spent a little extra time researching Excel formulas. In general, I know a fair amount about using Excel formulas, but you can always learn more. Excel is an exception program. I also researched wireframes for the independent research assignment. For the writing assignments, Call to Action and Anchor Points, I completed the required posts and comments by their assigned due dates. For the development assignment, I read and watched the required materials.

Reflect and Connect:

Looking into wireframes I found that I knew more about them than I knew, I just didn't know what they were called. For the writing assignments, I enjoyed researching quotes about continual learning. For the development assignment, I really enjoyed the TedTalk about stress and "pre-mortem" planning. I need to start more pre-mortem planning. The reading assignments also taught me more about the downsides of working for yourself as a freelancer. I think this sort of work can always be a part of my schedule if it fits around my job, but I would like the security of a full-time job. In general, I believe I'm better with my time management than I was in the beginning of this class, and as usual, my knowledge has continued to expand.
